

Abstract

=====

The talk will focus on the CALICE data acquisition system currently being developed for future calorimeter prototypes for the International Linear Collider. The DAQ system was also motivated by trying to use a standards-based approach and commercially available equipment, leading to a generic system which could in principle be used for many different types of detector. This will be compared with a more traditional approach and experiences gained will be discussed.